Military Units in Marcali/Expansion of Marcali

There are several military units, particularly signal units stationed in Marcali. The following units are stationed in Marcali at present:

a. One battalion of infantry accommodated in the same barracks as the armored regiment [redacted] 25X1

b. Telecommunications Battalion, stationed in the military barracks in the northwestern outskirts of Marcali. [redacted] 25X1

2. The town of Marcali is now the seat of the district administration and has expanded recently, particularly in the northern section. There the town is merging with the villages of Kis and Nagyszeke. The main street in the town is still called Sztalin ut. The large former Nagyberek swamps which before World War II stretched from Marcali up to the southern shores of Balaton lake have been largely drained. The extended meadows of this area are now used for cattle breeding. The cultivation of rice which has been going on there for quite some time is still on an experimental scale. North of Marcali in the small town of Ketnely, an infantry and a small artillery unit are stationed. The cultivation of vineyards is still kept up in the hills between Marcali and Ketnely.

3. [redacted] there is a military airfield in operation near Szamalisk. 25X1
